· Full-length church services and the Communist authorities and the Communist authorities began to improve in the late 1950s but have made most headway since 1970, when many restrictions have been gradually relaxed. What was not granted until roday, however, was the Church's demand for access to the media.

Compared with other Com-munist countries, the Church in Poland has enjoyed a privi-leged position. This was due not so much to Communist toler ance as to the fact that throughout Polish history the Church had played an important role in sustaining the nation and sharing its problems. Nowhere else in East Europe has the Church been so closely identified with a nation. It was Poland's bulwark against Protestant Germany and Orthodox Russia in the more distant past. And this record no regime could have ignored. Especially since Pope John Paul was elected, the authorities have been making concessions. Permits for the building of new churches are now being freely granted. Last year in Warshin alone permis-sion was given for 14 new churches. This marks a sharp contrast with the period up to 1970 when no licences at all were issued.

Liverpool port employers yesterday welcomed the deci-sion by a national dock delegate conference to call off the threatened strike but political difficulties lie ahead for the Government.

The Transport and General Workers' Union (TGWU), to which the men belong is to press ministers for increased public spending in dockland to avert labour difficulties of the sort that prompted the threat-ened balt to Britain's exports. Mr Alex Kitson, deputy-general secretary of the IGWU, said last night: "If our ports are going to be viable and ableto compete with European ports, then the Government must have a new policy of investment and modernization.

Then, I am sure, it would not be a dying industry." Union officials vesterday claimed that the Liverpool dockers had been used as pawns by employers in the ort who wanted the kind of evernment financial aid that government financial aid that had been granted in London by the Labour government but denied to other ports by the Conservative Administration,

The union is planning to seek the support of port employers in a joint approach to the Cabinet for public funding of ancillary activities such as dock and lock gate maintenance, said to be common-place in other countries in the European Community, so that overall costs to stevedoring companies are brought into line with European ports. The issue of increased redundancy pay for the dock workers will be taken up today by the National Joint Council for the Ports Industry, and Mr. James Fitzpatrick, chairman of the Liverpool port employers, vesterday predicted a new formula for payoffs that would result in a "marked acceleration" in the number of men leaving the industry. Voluntary severance is seen by the Liverpool employers as

Families eat more meat, fewer potatoes

Families in Britain are eating more meat, according to the government figures published

Purchases of beef, pork and lamb all rose markedly in the first quarter of this year, averaging 18.5 nunces a perso a week, compared with 16.4 ounces a year before.

The national fond survey, carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, showed that rises for beef and pork "appeared to he entirely due to hulk purchases for freezer storage, although for lamb there was also an increase in purchases by households not owning a deen freeze".

Food prices rose by 12 per cent in the first quarter, well below the general rate of in-flation, but housewives' spending rose by about 16 per cent over the same period last year, according to the survey of more than 2,000 households.

Average food spending was 26.92 a person a week, 98p higher than a year ago. Consumption of milk rose from 4.17 to 4.33 pints a person week, desnite an increase in the retail price, but butter pur-chases dropped to their lowest level for many years, at 4.25 ounces, compared to 4.47 ounces last year.

The British are consuming fewer potatoes and sausages and less sugar and capped fruitand more fish and fresh registables, the survey ignorted.

The answer, of course, is that we live in a democracy, a system that guarantees everyone certain rights. Including freedom of speech. And it's the Police who defend those rights, whether they're the rights of the individual or the rights of a particular minority.

However, that is only part of their job. They must also defend the rights of the crowd (or Society) against certain individuals: that is, the rights of the law-abiding majority against the law-breaking minority.

This means that the streets aren't ruled by the law of the jungle.

It also means you don't have too many worries about sleeping in your bed at night, or walking down a dark and lonely street.

Which makes a police officer's work extremely important and very demanding.

It helps if you have a fairly balanced outlook on life, and you can see both sides of an argument. A great deal of compassion and understanding doesn't come amiss, nor does a little courage. And we would prefer you to be as good at helping

He suggested that the work could be staged, with the board paying part of the cost and the Rational meeting the rest when it had the resources.

In the Olivier Thearre the drain revolve appears little nearer completion than it was two years ago, when Mr Harrison said it was broadly speaking, finished.

He said last week that the revolve was mechanically and electrically complete, but certain matters had to be resolved. It may be quite a time before it is brought into use. The power flying system in the Olivier was in partial use, he thought it would be fully operational in another year.

Relations between the board and the staff of the National are not easy and the theatre last week refused to comment on the present position.

Welshman makes first British solo ascent of the Eiger north wall

Mr Eric Jones, of Tremadoc, North Wales, has become the first British mountaineer to climb the north wall of the Eiger alone. He completed his ascent last week after spending three days and two nights on the face, which is acknowledged to be one of the most treacherous in the Alps.

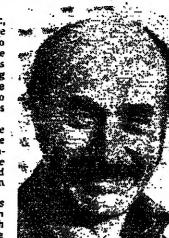

Mr Jones, aged 43, is the most notable climber among the small group of British mountaineers who attempt the hardest Alpine routes alone and without any of the protection that reduces risk.

Among his many solo climbs have been the first British ascent of the Matterborn north wall, the first ascent of the Brouillard central pillar on Mont Blanc and the second solo of the Bonatti pillar, on the Chamonix Alguilles.

"The climb on the Eiger was something I had been dreaming about for five years, but whenever I was out there the conditions were not right", he said. This year, although conditions were far from ideal, a forecast of several days of stable weather persuaded him to set off up the 5.900ft face, On the first afternoon he on the Tirst arternoon areached the tiny area known as the Swallow's Nest, below the steep rise of the second ice field. He bivouacked there before setting out across the 55-degree ice slope. The weather held fine hut the rock pitches were covered with ice. That reduced the barrage of is infamous, but increased the technical difficulty of the climb. In such conditions a solo mnuntaineer halances his life on the points of his cram-pons, the steel spikes that hold the boot to the icy mountain

Mr Eric Jones: Conqueror of a treacherous face.

The ascent took 20 hours climbing time, during which a number of stone falls went over his head. The ramp leading to the Traverse of the Gods, normally a reasonable rock pitch, was full of ice and "quite difficult". Mr Jones said with understatement. He spent his second hight there. At one point the ice was so hard that it was difficult to make an impression on it with his axe. Addression to the mountain seemed so slight, he said, that he continued in a state of consciousness beyond the awareness of fear. A colleague watching the climb said that it had been greeted as a great schievement, although it terrifying to watch.

The first solo ascent of the Eiger north wail was made by M Michel Darbellay, a Swiss guide, in 1963. It has seldom been repeated.

Irish hotels that host police talks threatened

The Irish National Liberation Army (INLA), threatened on Saturday to bomb hotels it said had been used for meetings be-tween police from both sides of the Northern Ireland border.

The group said that two meetings had taken place between members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Gardai in the Hope Arms, Castleblaney, co Monaghan. The hotel has received a direct threat.

Another threatened horel, the County Monaghan, about four miles asside the Irish Republic denied that joint police meetings had taken place there. The INLA said its threat would be withdrawn if hoteliers publicly. announced that facilities for security forces would not be provided and that meetings had taken place without their know-

The Ortine Hotel, in Lisnaskea, co Fermanagh, about 15 miles inside Northern Ireland, was severely damaged by an in-cendiary bomb on Saturday might, soon after the group issued its matement. Three armed and masked men planted two devices, one of which exploded an hour later. The hotel had been evacuated and no one was injured.

No organization had claimed responsibility for that attack last night, but the INLA claimed responsibility for bombing a British customs post on the border and for abducting an English hitch-hiker in Castle-blane, whom they appeared of blaney whom they suspected of being a member of the security He was released un-

New Soviet Warhead mystery in missile explosion

Investigations into the explosion of the Titan 2 missile in Arkansas on Friday have already begun on the spot, and will continue there, in the Defence Department and in Congress. There will undoubtedly be Congressional hearings into what happened and into the continuing utility of the

The Government still refuses to say where or not there was a nuclear warhead on the missile when it blew up. Some newspapers, including the Washington Post, report flatly that there was a warhead, an eight megaton hydrogen bomb, and that it was blown clear of the silo and landed intact 200ft

The newspaper gives on source for the story. Other papers are less specific, but all of them are most dubinus shout the Air Force's refusal to discuss the matter.
The Washington Post's story

seems, on the face of it, to be unlikely: the missile in its silo was covered by a concrete lid weighing 750 tons which was destroyed by the blast. It does not seem plausible that a war-head could have survived the explosion and then been ejecred through the debri. Officials insist that there has een no leak of radiouctivity. On Friday afternoon, the Secretary of the Air Force told re-porters here that about 20 men had been injured, one of them seriously. It turned out later that day that one man had been killed and a second seriously injured, so Government assurances are not being accepted

Their most critical assurance is that the warhead could not explode by accident. The Secretary. Mr Hons Mark, said that the accident was, in effect a "worst case" accident, Assum-ing that there was a warhead the accident was a graphic demonstration that safety precautions are good. The Air Force says that war-heads explude after a series of steps have been taken to arm them, the last of which takes place while the missile is in flight. There is a danger, however, that the warhead might break upen, spreading pluton-ium around the site. This happened once when an aircraft crashed.

It did not happen on Friday, However, the possibility worries people. The one that expluded was in a remote part of Arkansas. Others are much cluser to towns, and people liv-ing near the 52 or 53 remaining DELYOUS.

Many killed as monsoon creates havoc in India

Delhi, Sept 21.-Monsoon floods in the eastern coastal state of Orissa, which have already taken a heavy toll of life and property during the past four days, are expected to peak early tomorrow, according to reports reaching here this evening.

The official death toll is put at 203, but press reports today claimed that as many as 1,000 people had been killed.

Mrs ludira Gandhi, the Prime Mrs ludira Gandhi, the Prime Minister, was in touch with Mr J. B. Patnaik, the state's Chief Minister, who told her that there was no danger to the Hirakud dam, the world's longest, on the Mahanadi river and that the reservoir was being kept below danger level.

A few hours later, Mrs Gandhi released 500,000 rupees (about $25,000) from the national relief fund for Orissa flood victims.

Fond and medicines were being dropped by air to worst hit towns. The newspaper Pourint said today that in Gunupur only 70 of the town's 3,000 houses had survived the fury of flood waters from the Vamsadhara river.

days. In Orissa reports quote an eyewitness as saying "tens of thousands of people are sur-rounded by flood water and the level is rising rapidly". -Agence France-Presse.

Assad visit to Moscow next month

From Tewfik Mishlawl Beirut, Sept 21

President Assad of Syria will make a state visit to the Soviet Union in the first balf of next month. There are reports that he might sign agreements uppracting the existing relations between the two countries.

News of the visit was first released by Tass, and later confirmed by the official Damascus radio.

Reports from Damascos today said that Libya had transferred $1,000m (£400m) to the Soviet Union to pay, for new arms supplies bought by Syria recently. Libya has also trans-ferred a total of $600m to Damascus to support Syria's sagging economy, the reports said. Syrian officials, however, refused to confirm or deny the eports.
The sid would be in line with the plan by President Assad and Colonel Gaddafi to merge then two countries in one single state. The two leaders are due to meet in Damascus soon to work out the details of the plan, which they approved in Tripoli earlier this month.

President Assad's last visit to Moscow was in October last year. Syrian leaders have often said that they planned to introduce a "qualitative improvement" in their relations with the Soviet Union to help restore the balance of power between Syria and Israel.

The Syrians argue that this balance has been seriously disrupted as a result of Egypt's signing of a peace treaty with Israel.

Exactly what form this improvement in Syrian-Soviet re-lations will take is not known. but recent speculation has said it might be a long-term friend-ship and cooperation agreement or some form of a joint defence

The Soviet Union is the principal arms supplier for both Syria and Libya Major-General Mustafa Tlas of Syria is reportedly planning to visit France later this month to buy weapons that will again be financed by Libya. His shopping list is said to include ground-toair missiles, gunboats and spare parts for Syria's air defences

Meanwhile, neither Jordan nor Syria has yet denied a Kuwaiti newspaper report that two Syrian Air Force pilots had defected to Jordan and sought political asylum there. The daily Al-Qabas reported yesterday that Jordan had turned down a request by Syria to extradite the pilots, who flew to Jordan in their Soviet MiG-21 jet fighters last Tuesday.

Mr Christopher Mercer, his local advocate has withdrawn from the case and there is a problem over fees and expenses. Eccause of this an application may be made for a postpone-ment of the trial which is fraught with political overtones and is likely to last at least two weeks.

Singapore accuses Australia of protectionism

Snapping at the provider's hand

Singapore, Sept 21

Mr Malcolm Fraser, the Australian Prime Minister, and Mr Lee Kuan Yew, the Prime Minister of Singapore, share similar views on most international issues. But, as their recent public disagreement shows, their views part company over economics and particularly over the sort of economic policy that Australia should pursue in relation to the countries of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (Asean).

Mr Lee believes that Australians are protectionists par excellence and, in his characteristic fashion, is not atraid to tell them so. But if any of the Asean coun-

JERUSALEM'S PLACE IN HISTORY

CIR-Out of 120 members of the Knesset 51 withheld their support from the recent "Jerusalem Law". We believed that the Act of Union adopted was an adequate expression of Israeli rights.

We believed that a mere reiteration would not reinforce—and might even weaken—the international disposition to come to terms with the legitimate development of Jerusalem as Israel's capital. The problem now is not the wisdom or timeliness of a Parliamentary Act. The question at issue is the deeper truth about Jerusalem's place in the history and emotion of the world.

Here all Israelis are united in a commo sense of rectitude in which we invite all enlightened men and governments to join. It is true that many outside Israel and the Jewish people have an interest in Jeru-salem. But it is an offence against scholarlip and historic truth to speak of equality between the Jewish connection and anything else.

Israel should not claim exclusiveness of concern but it has an immaculate claim to priority, Jerusalem is a theme of reverence in Christianity and Islam as a reflection and consequence of its Jawish sanctity.

None of the nations that conquered Jerusalem or any part of it by sending their armies into the city from outside. Byzantium (395), the Arabs from the Peninsula 1636), the Crusaders (1099), the Mame-lukes from Egypt (1291), the Cttoman Tucks (1517). Britain (1917), Jordan (1945), over year it as the birthplace of their nation or the central shrine of their faith.

None of them even sought to make it their national or religious capital. Under every other rule Jerusalem has been a province or colony. Only in terms of Jewish experience is it the city "ser-above the hills", symbol of man's unceasing quest for individual and social perfection.

israel has less cause for self-reproach about Jerusalem than any other element in the international community. When danger threatened Jerusalem through bombard-ment by Jordanian guns in 1948 and again in 1967—each time without provocation— the United Nations and its leading members looked the other way.

When the Arab Legion under British command brought the city under terrible siege and fire; when Jordan subsequently razed every synagogue to the ground, forbade the access of any lew to the Western Wall and of Israeli Moslems to the Al Aqsah mosque, converted the Jewish tomb-stones on the Mount of Olives into pavingstones for latrines and made the eastern part a minimal line among no international voice hal Association

This does not mean that universal or Arab interests in Jerusalem should be set aside. In the beart and centre of the city there is a wonderful testimony to the legacy of Islam. Throughout most of the 19th century Jerusalem languished. A writer in 1856 compared it to "a pilgrim grev with age who has come here and sunk down to die; If the division of Jerusalem for two decades between 1948 and 1967 is Jerusalem's dark age, the 13 years since then have been its age of enlightenment. Instead of division there is free movement. Instead of gunfire there is serenity. Instead of sacrilege there is free pilgrimage to the shrines of every faith.

The modern international system is a system of states and Jerusalem has to be governed by someone. No historic imagina-tion should be affronted by the idea that the people that gave Jerusalem its original fame and its universal resonance.

Jerusalem has had a Jewish majority for the best part of a century. Those who argue that the West Bank and Gaza should have an Arab political destiny because their population is overwhelmingly Arab are on poor ground when they forget the majority principle in Jerusalem.

Aside from being the first new French play to reach the British stage for several years, Jean Claude Grumberg's The Workshop is an acute reminder of how swiftly wartime alliances evaporate at the return of,

The leaders of the new critical movement in the cinema were Andrzej Wajda, cinema were Andrzej Wajda, now 54, who was already a quarter of a century ago the key figure in the then new Polish school; and the brilliant, intellectually clinical Kravsztof Zanussi, now 41. Wajda's Man of Marble and Rough Treatment and Zanussi's Camoujlage were prototypes; and the two directors provided, equally, a personal influence and stimulus to their younger colleagues. Agnieska Holland, who made a brilliant debut with Provincial Actors, had been assistant to Actors, had been assistant to Zanussi and was the writer of Rough Treatment. Other new directors included Kraysztof Kieslowski, who won the Moscow Festival Grand Prix with a devastating comic commentary on various deformations of the social system, Camera Buff, Feliks Falk (Top Dog, Chance) and Janusz Kijowski, the director of Kung Kijowski, the director of Kung

The Conductor stars John Gielgud (and some un-certainty over language and dubbing conventions also mars the film) as a great experience America to perform and even-tually to die—in his native land. The irruption of this majestic presence creates serious disturbances in the life of the community, the erobestra and a couple of young musicians. Through this anecdate Wajda succeeds in probing deeply into the varied neuroses of provin-

Constans (The Constant Factor), first shown in Cannes, depicts a young man resisting the perty corruption he sees around him in the org-anization, responsible for anization, responsible for arranging official exhibitions overseas, in which he works. Superficially this is a theme that other film-makers have already explored fully. Zan-ussi's approach goes deeper in its sophistication, dealing with aspects of futalism, and con-fronting much thornier questions in the young man's search for an abstract morality (the "constant factor" of the title) in a society where morality, by ideological principle, is only

With fierce humour, Kutz-for whom this is the third and last of a trilogy of films on the Silesian coal mines—asserts the rights and dignity of the individual. Raplewski's Horkers Voices, attack managements who return only double-talk to the work people's complaints about inpeople's complaints about in-adequate supplies and working conditions. Marcel Lorinski's Microphone Test, more violently, exposes the fiction of worker participation in a cos-metics factory. Krzysztof Kies-lowski's brilliant Talking Heads explores a history of attitudes by whisking through a pageant of Poles, ranging from two years old to 100, and asking them the same questions about identity and expectation.

Perhaps the most remarkable of this group of films bowever is Irena Kamienska's Working Women, an exposure of a neglected textile factory where women employees protest against conditions that betray a Victorian carelessness about the workers.

While none of the other films on show in Gdansk this year compared in importance with these, it was striking that the theme of individuality—indivi-dual fulfilment, individual dual fulfilment, individual responsibility, individual aware-ness—recurred, whether the settings were contemporary (15 of the total 28 films) or historical (the remaining 13). With no fewer than 12 directors making first features this year, Poland's purposeful and highly contemporary new cinema is, for the moment, providing a stiff breeze in socialist European film-making.

During the first two acts of Wagner's Signified at Covent Garden on Friday, I began to wonder whether Colin Davis, having freed his interpretation from the influences of, say, Solti and Goodall, was now (on the traces of Bohm at Bayreuth) exaggerating the unheroic, cosy possibilities of that monumental but versatile score, making roo much of buoyant pulses, airy orchestral textures, exhibitating tempi. There had been omens in Das Rheingold, even more in the richer and grander tapestry of Die Walkure,

My predecessor Frank Howes raught readers that Siegirica is taught readers that Siegirical is the scherzo of The Ring. Enter-rainment abounds in its first two acts: Davis made much of Mime's absurdity, Siegiried's hoyish impatience and physical energy. Wotan's bonhomous quizzing, the horseplay of Mime and Alberich (Götz Friedrich's production makes it a dance of the conduction makes it and the conduction makes it and the conduction makes it and the conduction makes and the conduction makes a conduction production makes it a dance of exasperated beetles), Fainer's extravagant disguise as the dragon, and all that woodland magic.

caution, and German conso nants quite unwillingly. soft singing renewed tamillar pleasures, and he threw himself industriously into forging and instrument-making. He truly feeling his way.

John Dobson's Mime, dangerous exotic insect as much as maure - and - white minstrel. tends to monopolize attention with cogent singing and an inexhaustible armoury of comic or balciul detail. As Alberica, Rolf Kühne can convey the menacing grandeur of Woran's menacing grandeur of Woran's dark dier ego by word and gesture, but is vocally hampered by a shortage of firm tonal centre. Is not the riddle scene, in which Mime learns of his imminent death, the parallel to Brunnbilde's Todesverkundigung to Siegmund, just as the slaughter of Fafner echoes the discomiture of Alberich in Rheingold?

Came the third act, and Sir Colin, surely aware that Triston and Meistersinger had inter-vened, at once found the awesome spaciousness for Wotan's journey to Erda, and fateful colloquy with her: Donald Mc-loryre and Elizabeth Bain-bridge, like the ROH Orchestra, were at one with him. The clos ing scene of Brünnhilde's swakening dragged its heels, with a Siegfried still less sure of himself than we were of him, and Berit Lindbolm's awkward, soid though amply voiced Brünnhilde,

Evening Edged in Gold By Arno Schmidt Translated by John E. Woods

(Marion Boyars, 150, after Sept 25, £60.) The late Arno Schmidt is too little honoured outside his own country. Not surprisingly, perhaps, is that the labour of translating his work evidently demands something more than more linearity or literacy. mere linguistic or literary Schmidt was a respected critic: not only of all our tritons such as Joyce and Dickens, but also of the cherished minnows (certainly not in his own estimation) in German and English literature— Bulwer Lytton, Poe, Wilkie Collins, Fenimore Cooper, Karl May, Jean Paul and very many more. He was also a formidable more. He was also a formiosofe theorist, resolutely experi-mental in narrative technique, orthography and presentation of devious and devant aspects of consciousness which he did not believe could be expressed in traditional forms within in traditional forms within a Conventional social frame. More than this he was a superb novelist of huge ambition and by a dionysiac troupe who stir up dark pools of resentment. Just and obsession. Once the waters are perturbed Arno Schmidt's pessimistic landscape, strangely lit with humour and tolerance, buzzes with the con-versation of the creatures hegan around 1880 and only the Bride Stripped Bare By paused in 1914: the motor car, the aeroplane, recorded sound, moving pictures, electric light; After all, he had given up Marie Curte, Alfred Whitehead, Einstein. Pride of place went to the Eiffel Tower, described as a pivot in human consciouspaces and photographed with a precise of photographed with a precise of the patterns made by the patterns made by the patterns and photographed with a precise of the patterns of the descentification of tolerance, duzzes with the conversation of the creatures released. It is an ancient and future scene in which real and symbolic figures (belonging to pre-history and post-nuclear disaster) sometimes caper obscenely or submit edged in a dying glow of humanity.

The major's household consists of himself, severely maimed in body though generous of mind, his sexually sub-volcanic wife, their primavernal step-daughter, a degenerate if erudite brother-in-law, a gentle and sensitive scholar who is also an author, and a lascivious housekeeper. The abandoned train of sexual conjurors and clowns who descend upon them are led by a flying Luxembourgeoise god-dess, fragile and powerful, able to bestow peace yet unable to accept it for herself. She is accompanied by a primeval monster-god who might have been chipped out of a Wessex hillside complete with club and penis erect; and of a Wessex billside complete with club and penis erect; and and artists therein (see Radio by an egregious chronicler who, to some prejudiced minds, will recall the professional academic dropout of the late Times), a certain bloody-mindedness will find a way of breaking in. Standby, Exciter ! The brief stay of this rabble releases the "oldster" men from their bookish babblings which has bitherto been relieved only by mildly voyeuristic aprics of one sort or another; more significantly the two older women are offered a roaring outlet for pent-up seismic lust; most importantly the strange female leader of the cult brings to term the fresh and natural longing of the adolescent girl without taint or squalor. The novel is far more complex than this outline could possibly suggest. Every page is crammed with allusions, references quotations from Schmidt's vast reading, relevant notes in boxes. Contemporancous events are parrated sideby-side in double columns. There are diagrams, drawings, maps and photographs scattered about the text which is offered in the form of the facsimile of a typescript complete with corrections, overtypings, blottings-out and apparently unnoticed mistakes. Schmidt's idiosyncrasics of word-formation and spelling tend to lend a deceptive con-formity to the writing at first sight. The shortest reflection on any episode, however, reveals richness and variety of language. Some passuges are very obscene: others are delicate and beautiful. Implicit throughout is the contrast between the tenderness of sexual love and the chimerical furies of lust in action. The typographical eccentricities are no mere exercise in whimsy. As the tale great achievement.

Evening Edged in Gold is an acidly farcical fairy tale in which the stagnating family of an artillery veteran is visited and private reservations of those taking part in a particuunfolds in the form of dialogue. those taking part in a particular scene, Schmidt contrives to use punctuation marks, type-writer symbols and a whole variety of significant cyphers to suggest an intenstion or a facial expression. Since an important theme of the novel is the subconscious implication of words (especially in sexual connotations), the proliferate errata, alternative spellings and puns are obviously central to the author's purpose, if eventually somewhat trying.

The novel costs £50 (until September 25th—when it will sell at £60). Is it worth it? Is any novel, especially at a time when fiction is having a difficult spell? A reviewer can only answer personally. Asked such a question before reading Evening Edged in Gold, I should have undoubtedly answered no: I should not buy it. Now, I would be prepared to adjust other expenditure in afford it. But it is a collector's item—for readers who are item-for readers who are excited by technique and technical virtuosity and who delight in pondering at leisure the implications of a phrase or an illusion. Schmidt is scathing about the standards of a tele-visually stimulated society, prepared to make the least conceivable effort for the cheapest available mrill; it is not surprising that in this story of innocence and experience, domestice jealousy, connubial hatred, pubertal and senescent lust, hope and failure, he has also approach a signification. also captured a civilization dying of wilful marcosis, a pleasure garden which visitors have made grotesque at closing time but where there is still a corner for comic gloom, stoic wit and tolerance.

poration is to sell its freehold shopping precinct at 103/123 Kilburn High Road, London,

The two-level scheme which is fully let, was completed in 1969 and is being marketed through Conrad Ritblat and Co, who are asking a price in the region of £2.25m for the investment.

The property provides about 35,000 sq ft at ground level, and a further 16,000 sq ft on the first floor. There is also a small residential element and an underground car park.

Current annual income approaches £150,000 a year and the agents are quoting an estiover £200,000. Most of the leases are for a term of 21 years from 1969 to 1971, and most of these are nearing their second sevenvear review.

In Surrey, Dimsdale Developments (South East) and Crowvale Properties, a subsidiary of Associated Newspapers, have begun a major face-lifting operation on the former Waverley District Council offices at Buryfields, Guildford.

The 125-year leasehold interest in the building was acquired by Dimsdale and Crowvale last year for over £900,000. The scheme will provide about 17,000 so ft of offices and when completed next summer the renovation will include such items as carpets, suspended ceilings and a new lift, plus parking for 40

The building has been renamed Dimsdale House and has unrestricted office use, It is just to the west of the River Wey and is within a few minutes walk of the Guildford railway and bus stations.

The scheme was introduced to Dimsdale by Edwin Dickson, of Eagle House, Market Square, Midhurst, who is joint letting agent with Hillier Parker May and Rowden. An initial rent of about £160,000 a year is being the next 24 hours are the most crucial."

Friday's bout in front of a packed house acroaming for Owen's blood was almost an anticlimax to the chilling and tragic conclusion of the Welshman's challenge. The bout went along in predictable fashion with the thin almost skeletal Owen never giving an inch, pressing forward, scoring three times to knockout specialist Pinto's one punch. True Owen's punches were not lethal, more wearing than anything else.

But he never cringed nor withdrew from the flery Mexican in their ceaseless toe to toe combat. It—was neck and neck until the ninth round and in fact ringsiders gave the Welshman the edge until that point, even though one scribe. Surveying the fervent and volatile Mexican American crowd noted. The eternal quest for someone, somewhere, to appear in British tennis as a potential world beater emerged in a new form at the Queen's Club in London on Saturday. In the first half, when the Fulham fairy tale was proceeding comfortably, Aspey scored two tries and Toffs one and the threat of a Keighley victory seemed remote. Then the Yorkshire underdogs roused themselves as only underdogs can and took charge of the game. Moll, Garner, Bardgett. broken back to love on his own service

The 25-year-old Australian steadied in the third, again breaking Panatta, but failed to hold the advantage. McNamara was let down thronghout by his forehand volleys, almost all of which he natted, and by a mediocre backhand. He also admitted he had been disturbed by the pressure and noise of the Roman crowd.

Czechoslovakia's outstanding young player Ivan Lendi overcame a similar distraction in Buenos Aires as he completed his personal destruction of Argentins. Lendi, 20, defeated Jose Luis Clerc 6—1, 7—5, 6—8, 6—2.

It was Lendi's third victory of the tie. He beat both the leading Argentines in singles on their home ground, upsetting first of all their top player Guillermo Villas 7—5, 5—5, 5—7 in a match which began on Friday and ended on Saturday after darkness prevented its completion on the first day. On the second day Lendi, in parmership, with Tomas Smid, also earned a 6—2, 5—4, 6—3 triumph over Vilas and Clerc Yachting

Wind increases and Freedom romps to victory

From John Nicholls Newport, RI, Sept 21 The defending yacht, Freedom, won the third race of the best-of-seven. America's Cup series off Newport today to take a lead of two races to one over the chal-lenger, Australia. The result was in doubt throughout the first round when the breeze was light and shifty, but as soon as it increased to 15 knots and above, Freedom romped away to win by 53 seconds. Both boats finished with protest flags in their rigging, but the reasons would not be known until the crews came ashore.

The pattern of the races has shown that the series could be determined by the weather. In winds of under 10 knots Australia rangs or under 10 knots Austrana seemed the faster boat. From 10 to 15 knots the boats are competitive or the first reach and partly to 15 knots the boats are competitive or the second beat.

Freedom never lost her lead, though the distance between her and Australia varied around the course. The nearest she came to being caught was when her spinnaker hoist got in a tangle on the square run and she was only eight seconds ahead at the leeward mark.

Before that she had split a spindelphia and Memphis franchises.

After Friday's encouraging win for Australia, many of us here began to wonder if we had not been too hasty in our earlier judgment of the challenger's chances. The win was no fluke, though the breeze was flukey, for Australia overtook Freedom not once but twice during the race. She showed speed that was the equal of Freedom's on all points of sailing and much of the credit for this must be due to her new rig.

That second race of the series will now become one of the milestones in America's Cup history. It is already being talked about as the best 12-metre match race in the history of the event. There was drama from start to finish and well into the night after the race tive, while above 15 knots Freedom takes over. The Australians have requested a lay day tomorrow, obviously expecting the fresh breeze to continue.

There was little to choose between the two boats at the start. Freedom crossed the line three seconds ahead of Australia but was to leeward with both boats on port tack. The light breeze was far from steady, but Dennis Conner at the helm of Freedom played the shifts better and led by 47 seconds at the windward mark.

Freedom never lost her lead.

She certainly had her troubles today, but her sails held together on the final leg and she eventually was over. The start was delayed until the last possible moment (2.10) before racing had to be abandoned for the day. It finished only eight minutes before the time limit expired and the two boats were never more than 47 seconds apart around the course. The win was no fluke, though the breeze was flukey, for all points of the challenger's chantes. The win was no fluke, though the breeze was flukey, for once but twice during the race. They argued that lights were a mere technicality required by maritime law and nothing to do with racing on a totally enclosed circuit. Luckly for Conner and his reputation the protest was not pursued and the result stood. The Australians now have more popular support than they have ever before enjoyed.

Inventive Slough create all the magic By Sydney Friskin Slough 5

Slough 5

Slough English and European club champions, collected more silverware yesterday by winning the Inter-League title at Barclays Bank sports ground, North Ealing. By defeating Westcliff in the final they won the title for the second, time, having previously succeeded in the 1976-7 season.

The splendid goalkeeping of

The splendid goalkeeping of Kaye and some tight marking by Copping averted a landsilde, After 25 minutes, Slough were still only a goal up and Westcliff polished their same. Among their applicaa goal application of their exploits were two attacks launched by French from the right, and Taylor in the Slough goal made tarce saves from two short corners. But Slough, their defence solid and their control more secure, increased their lead through Saini from a penalty stroke and Laly from open play.

Much of the second half became too one sided to have any appeal although Westcliff did make some progress and twice threatened to

Watson out of NZ open

Auckland, Sept 21.—The New Zealand Squash Association said today that they were not accepting an entry from the South African professional, Roland Watson, for next month's New Zealand Open. M. D. McCarthy, the association president said: "We have taken a long and searching look at the ramifications of Watson playing here and how his competing could possibly jeopardize other sports, Mr. McCarthy said he appreciated that squash professionals regarded themselves as a group who made a living from playing squash and were above politics."

all. In truth Forest could have reached double figures and still had chances to spare.

City waved the white flag from midfield at the outset, and the forwards only flew their colours twice, in the first minute and the eighty-eighth. With such unemployment it was hard to understand why the defence should be so undermanned. Even when they did hack the ball away it only fell at Forest feet.

did back the ball away it only fell at Forest feet. It was, therefore, all the more amazing that they were still in with a shout up until the seventy-third minute. But by then this false position had encouraged misplaced adventure and Robertson was allowed to face thirdight quiet waters until torpedoed unfairly by the until to puntish Wallington, who like all good captains was the last to go down. Until then he had been a defiant last line of defence. Shilton, at the other end, had been bathing indy in reflected glory. It was on his recommendation that Leicester signed Wallington many years ago. The dam, now punctured twice, first by Gray's thunderous free kick in the eleventh minure, burst completely and the persistent battering of Birtles finally paid dividends, twice in 10 minutes. First he intercepted May's short back pass and then he rounded off a fine plece of acceleration by Ponte, Forest's recent £250,000 buy from Switzerland; a small price for a small gem.

The trappings of the remaissances for which Leeds yearn were there for all to join in, but when the day was done there was little to give hope that it is imminent. How could it be when nothing-has yet changed on the field. The new manager, Leeds old boy Allan Clarke, having aired his philosophy of what needs to be done first, led our his team Cup final fashion to a rapturous welcome. Thereafter there was opportunity for him to assess the dimensions of his commitment in a chair where predecessors have failed to recapture the good old days Clarke shared as a player at Elland Road.

Clarke's requirement of effort was answered noticeably in the second half of a disappointing match, but without the accompanying guile or boldness needed to ruffle Manchester who always gave the impression they would be satisfied to take a point back home.

Flynn began to trouble them more with nimble footwork and some advoir passes in the later stages of the afternoon, once he and Thomas had put their personal duels behind them—two diminutive Welsh dragons locked in fiery combat—but with neither side able to believe the stalemate on the approach routes to both goals, the

Though openings were scarce as sunstitute in an English summer, both goalkeepers made outstanding saves. Balley, in the first half, somehow got down to grasp Flyun's hard low short as Connor and Parlane opened the way in the second. Liftic distinguished himself equally in stopping Green hoff's header from Grimes's corner kick. But shase were the high lights of a largely colourless match.

Wales 32 Overseas XV 25

It is four years since Wales formitously got by against Argentine in Cardiff by a single point, and just under 12 months since they were thankful to prevail against Romania by the same margin. On Saturday, but for a late, saving tackle by Morgan, their substitute wing, they might have been just as grateful to estage as narrowly against a scratch combination drawn from far and wide, and assembled at the National Stadium for the first big contest of the Welsh centenary season, sponsored by Barclay's Bank.

All this, indeed after Wales Overseas XV 25

Bank.

All this, indeed, after Wales, doing much as they pleased in a festive ambiance and nigh-perfect conditions, had established a half-time lead of 28-9, to which Blyth had contributed 20 points. Minutes later their dashing full back must have felt like walking upon the waters as he acquired his third try of the afternoon by yet another timely intrusion into his line. But, alas, the chants of "Peed me "All I want no more", thought to herald a scarlet floodgate, preceded a stuttering midfield performance and an admirable rally by the visitors, who ran up the last 16 points of the game.

Afterwards South Africa's guru.

who ran up the last 16 points of the game.

Afterwards South Africa's guru, Dr Danie Craven, was tactful enough to inquire whether the host country had run out of steam or motivation. But the details of the final scoreline looked less embarrassing, three goals, two penalty goals and two tries for Wales, a goal, five penalties and a try for their opponents. Of the Overseas XV's points, 17 were kicked by the rugged Romanian centre, Constantin, and the remaining eight were notched by the Tongan tight head prop, Motu'spuska, who got one try when the forwards drove a wedge from a penalty tap under the Welsh posts and another when his front row union repaid with interest a failure by Bryamor Williams to find touch—the only blot on an otherwise versatile and well-judged performance by the Welsh scrum half.

However, Constantin's inaccurate adverer, Constantin's inaccurate iline-kicking, setting up willing Welsh counter attacks, contributed in the first period to his side's problems. They achieved nearparity in the lineout but denuded of possession at scrummage, maul and ruck, were denied the chance of a powerful loose trio—the Argentine, Travaglini, an nutsuanding member of it—making an aggressive impact.

ser, Madero, schleved one exciting break from behind a lineout in his 22.

There was no discarnible let-up in the Welsh forward drive, Wheel heaving a ready spoke into every mail and charge, Ringer's pace, and creativity restoring needed momentum on a flank and Butler enjoying a useful game at No 8. But Wales, surely, will want a match-fit Quinnell against New Zealand and before that encounter they will have to decide whether to bring back Martin as their leading ball-winner at the lineout for to persevere with the Cardiff lock. Norster, who made some good two-handed carches, but somedimes failed to confirm possession.

The remaining Welsh tries were scored by Brynmor Williams, darting through behind a truck, and Fenwick, whose strength, served by Budar and Williams from a strumwore on to increase anxiety shout the lack of pace at centre and the kicked all of the Welsh goals. Wales were left to reflect that if Constantin's last attempted conversion had not rebounded off a post, and if the Overseas full back, Taylor, had not been cut off by Morgan following an interception, the result would have been embarrassing indeed.

After half time Williams evaded Ulster's clutches to score a well-carned try which O'Brien converted. Two penalty goals by McCombe kept Ulster buoyant until they whited under the majesty of tries by Carleton and Slemen, undoubtedly among the world's best wing-threequarters.

Carleton's powerful surging stride gained him a try after at least 10 colleagues handled in a move which went across the field and back. In storing his next try he was unstoppable as he ran 30 yards down the touchline. Wright, at centre, scored the rext try from an opening by Morris, the loose forward, but the final glory was Slerren's. His rus and kick took play from the Lancashire helf, and ofter the ball had trarelled across the field, then back to him again, he danced through Ulster's defence. O'Brien converted all except one of the second half tries to enhance a Lancoshire triumph.

Richmond's diet of starvation

Ey Gordon Allan Northampton 27 Richmond 7 Richmond have besten North-Richmond have besten North-ampton more often than not dur-ing the past decade, but they never had the ghost of a chance at Franklin's Gardens on Saturday. Northampton, in their first victory of the season, stored three goals, two dropped goals, and a penalty goal, against a penalty goal and a try, and thissed away a score or-two besides. It was an efficient, rather than putstanding, performance, North-starvation diet of possession at the ineouts and rucks, and what fol-lowed was inevitable. Page had the freedom to play his favourite game, putting the ball ether into touch or into the box, Ebsworth did much the same, and when the Richmond line hove in sight, which frequently happened, Northampton released their backs. Ebsworth was an England schools international last season. last Wednesday, in an 18—18 draw with Northesbarn, he scored all last Wednesday, in an 18—18 draw with Nottingham, he scored all Northampton's points—four penalties, a ry, and a conversion. Northampton have high hopes of him. On Sarurday he did enough to show why. He also missed three penalties, but anyone can do that. Presson missed four for Richmond.

Richmond would have been glad.

Richmond would have been glad until the last quarter, when Northampton, 21—3 shead and impregnable, conceded a try by Lambert. Richmond were running the ball from their own goal area by that time, but their cause was lost, and in any case Northampton's defence was equal to most demands.

Northampton led 9-3 at half time. Page dropped a gool from a ruck almost under the crossbar, and Ebsworth converted a try by direct from a Richmond drop-out. Preston kicked a penalty for Richmond line to the standard of the ruch line of the second half. Night-Preston kicked a penalty for Richmond. In the second half, Pinches made the break for a try by McGuckian, and scored one himself in injury time. Mackaness dropped a goal when Gilbert missed touch and Ebsworth kicked a penalty and two conversions.

A satisfying result, then, for Northampton, but hardly a satisfying match for neutral onlookers. The referee blew his whistle too often for that.

Bennett still Selkirk run stands out in the crowd

Harlegolus 3 Lignelli 16

The passing years do nothing to diminish the stature of Phil Bennett; only, it seemed at Twickenham on Saturday, the structure of those around him diminishes. The near, pale-faced Welshman, who has captained club, county and British Lions, and is now approaching 32, has settled for rugby for pleasure after 14 years in the first class game. But he admitted that the game with Harlequias, won by a goal, a try and two penalty goals to a groupes goal, interpression of the pleasure.

It was untidy, strewn with bits and pieces of play which have yet to slot together in an overall pattern-like Turkenham's new South Stand, littered with contraction couloment, At times it struction equipment. At times it was downright tedings until Ben-nett twinkled his way through for the first try 30 seconds from the and of proper time.

It was by no means the referee's fault that stoppages abounded. Players constantly disregarded the law at ruck and maul and, frus-

lar at ruck and mani and, frus-trading though it may have been, paid the penalty. Lianelli were the worst offenders and were, lucky that Bushell had an off day with his kicking. He missed four penalty attempts and the substi-ture. Lawrence, one. Neither side were assisted by the injuries during the game to Gilmer and Kelly (Harlequins) and the Lianelli full back, Bowen, who broke a leg in the second half. Kelly was slightly concussed, but Gilmer broke a wrist and an elbow, to the regret of both his club and Middlesex. With virtually as secondary ball to play off, both pack divisions had to attack from set pieces and only Bennert looked cauble of doing that conclusively. For 70 minutes he was content to coast, give an exhibition of line-kicking and feed his young outsides. He also kicked two penalties and Macualay dropped Harbagains's goal. That half-time score looked likely to be the full-time score until Bennert, as if growing impatient with making the contents and seeing others drop the ball, took it on himself to complete what Dunglas and Charite Thomas had started. John added the conversion before Douglas, a promising strum half, began the move which ended with Kevin Thomas making the most of a huge overlap for the second tre.

comes to abrupt end

Selkirk's encouraging start to the shason—three wins out of three, a sevens trophy and the rumers-up position in another sevens tournament—suffered a jolf win Saturday. Less than five minutes of the game had been played when Selkirk fell a goal belind, never to recover. Without once raising their play to the standards needed if hopes of their first national championship as a combined side are to be realized, Stewart's-Melville scored two goals, three tries, a dropped goal goals, three tries, a dropped goal and a penalty goal with easy and a penalty goal with easy competence.

A club cannot be expected after all, to lose its best players to the South of Scotland's tour of the Irish Republic, lose another man injured early in the second half (without benefit of replacement), and hope seriously to make much impression against one of Scotland's strongest sides. So, early in the season, the arguments have begun again. Is it fair to clubs that there should be so many representative calls on their leading players; and how long must we wait before replacements are allowed for injured men? The Eorders sides were among those who voted against replacements at the Scottish Rugby Union's annual meeting in the summer, but I remain convinced they were wrong.

As the Labour Party conterence approaching soothing voices are to be heard telling us all is at last to be well with This Great Movement. Of Ours. Tony Benn and his constitutional changes will be staved off; the leadership will rest secure with the parliamentary Labour Party; the NEC will come under control again, policy differences can be swept under the carpet; the unions will ball as out from bankruptcy; and unemployment and the Thamber/ Joseph/Howe brand of economic masochism will ensure us victory at the next election.

Jaseph/Howe brand of economic masochism will ensure us victory at the next election.

No doubt there will be many, battle wears from the last three years of party infighting, sick to death of constitutional arguments, desperately anxious to get on with the job of getting the Tories out at the earliest possible opportunity, who will understandably want to see things that way. It's a cosy scenario, Unfortunately, it begs almost every important, question currently facing the Labour Party.

First, even if the constitutional proposals (to compel constituency Labour Parties to submit their MPs to full reselection procedures, even when a majority of their constituency party members want to keep them; to take away from the parliamentary Labour Party their rights in determining the Manifesto jointly with the NEC; and to contrive an electoral college to elect the Leader of the Party) are defeated—and this is by no means carrain—it will only be by a narrow margin. Those proposing the changes have already announced that if they lose this year they will charinue to press them.

They will, somewhat hypocritically but nevertheless justifiably, point to the doubtful legitimacy of the party conference as at present composed (and to the inadequacies of the trade union block vote in particular) and carry on their campaign, If they win then the opponents of the changes will in fact be settled.

no doubt take the same line. Nothing will in fact be settled.

As far as the NEC is concern if the centre-right were to hold its 9:3 majority in the trade union section and gain three seats in the women's section (an unlikely result), a 12:17 deficit would only be turned into an uncertain 15:14 majority. The NEC would still be left unreformed and unrepresentative of the reformed and unrepresentative of party as a whole.

On policy, the leftward drift that began with the Peace, Jobs and Freedom document presented to the Wembley conference is likely to be consolidated by the approval in some form of the "Draft Manifesto". Even the Trade and Industry paper from the Labour Party/TUC Liaison Committee, while it makes much more of an attempt to reflect economic reality, is volucrable to the central criticism of all three docu-ments: that they are unimaginative and doctrinaire in tone, pinning their hopes on the old formulae of public ownership, state intervention and moves towards protectionism, and avoiding many of the real issues.

In any case, packages agreed by the sleight of hand of saking everyone to approve documents as a whole, when individual parts might well have been defeated that the same intrinsically are intrinsically is total parts might well have been defeated if voted upon separately, are intrinsically unsatisfactory. For everyone will be able to pick and choose which bits to emphasize, while the groundwork is being laid for yet mother of the left's favourite Catch 22s: a Labour Government coming into office with commitments people know it cannot keep, set up to be vilified when surprise; surprise—it, fails to keep them.

The party's financial position will further inhibit our electoral prospects. Not only because of the party's parlous financial state. The trade unions are no longer prepared simply to pass more and more money across to the NEC. They have set up a monitoring committee to provide extra funds only on specific justification. In these circumstances, many electors are In these circumstances many electors are likely to believe that a party supervised. ship situation revealed by the Commission of Inquiry, with fewer Labour supporters and voters playing a part in the party's officies than at any time in its recent history (with, as a result, the democratic structure at the constituency level some times reduced to a charade) and anyone who thinks the Labour Party's troubles will be over after Blackpool is clearly under a delusion.

The culprits for this state of affairs are paradoxically not only the hard left. It was cynical but clever of them to see that the inevitable and traditional swins away from the party leadership and establishment after an election defeat could be used, not just to gain some left-ward policy shifts which might ultimately be reversed or ignored by the party leadership, but to change the party's constitution permanently to advantage the left. Within the constituencies, it is difficult to blame left-wing groups who

who are briefing so diligently that Jimbas fixed it, Denis will inherit and all will be for the best in the best of all possible worlds, do so while hankering through rose-coloured spectacles for the good old days, when the NEC caused no trouble, the trade union block-yote stilled all rebellion in the conference and the constituencies, the PLP did largely as it was asked, and the powers that be could rule untroubled by inconvenient distribunces from below.

disillusion. . We really can not go on like this and that is why we believe Shirley Williams Bill Rodgers and Devid Owen were right to speak out as they did.

But simply to reassert the underlying ideas of domestic socialism is not to draw up a coherent and relevant programme something hardly yet begun. If we are to get the policy issues right we must now move to pur our own house in order and has means facing up to some very difficult

The first and most difficult is how we are to reform the relationship between the political and industrial wings of the Labour movement between the party and the trade unions. The present relationship the trade unions. The present relationship is clearly unsuitsfactory and is becoming more so simply because the nature of the trade unions is changing. With the phenomenal growth of white collar union ism, a smaller and smaller proportion of trade union members are labour. Supporters.

Linions who, even 10 years ago, were considering affiliation to the party (the example) now show no signs of doing some in other unions the proportion of them bers paying the political levy is falling off slowly but surely: in the Association of Scientific, Technical and Managerial Staffs for example it is now down to less than 30 per cent. For a generation the unions have been growing away from party political adherence and many semion. party pointest adherence and many seniors trade union figures are essentially indiastrial in their outlook rather than political. Indeed it may be argued that the "winter of discontent" arose primarily because the medium term political consequences of their industrial activities were not seen clearly by some of the new generation of trade union leaders, or indeed their members.

The historical relationship of the unions and the Labour Party most change to meet a changing social and economical climate, not least among trade union-members themselves. It has at least to be considered that the role of the trade unions in financing the Labour Party and in particular its damaging effect on the legitimacy of the party's claim to a the legitimacy of the party's claim to a considered the continuous continu democratic structure through the purchasing of block votes at the party conference may not be appropriate for a democratic socialist party in the 1980s and 1990s. Which brings us straight to the structure of the party itself. It would not take de Tocqueville to point out how flawed oor claim to a democratic structure now is.

The average Labour vote in 1979 was around 20,000 in each constituency yet now, at best, 300-500 (less than 25 per cent) of those voters are members of their Constituency Labour Party and only around 50-60 (one quarter of one per sens); serve on the constituency management committee. Indeed, in many Labour held inner city seats the position is much worse than this. Many general management council delegates arrive there almust appointed, representing an organization which literally had so few active particle pants there was no one else to send.

This is not to criticize tens of thousands of dedicated party workers who often plough a lonely and unrewarded furrow in their locality, but simply to point out that the level of participation in the party is now so low that its claim to provide a

The Committee of Inquiry, fatally flaws from the outset by, the arguments about scomposition; and with its obvious desired, compromise to evoid rather than the face difficult issues, was in inevitable and dismal failure.

What is needed, now is a determine initiative to sort these matters out. I one view the following measures at required.

The first priority is to involve far mor Labour voters in the workings of the party at every level. We believe the hig gest incentive we could give would be gest incentive we could give would be to allow every party member of, say, one year's standing to participate and your in like selection and reselection of Labour partitioners or andidates—as we do for local authority candidates. And to accept that on this basis alone in accept that on this basis alone in constituency party wishes it, ever Labour MP about modern full reselection once in every partition.

The NEC must be restructured so the ordinary party members, Labour groups on local authorities and the parliament say party are all properly and directly represented. There must also be at appropriate regional belance. The organization of the party is far too hardly received presents to organization of the party is far too heavily weighted towards London. We should accept that the present We should accept that the present arrangements for drawing up the party's manifeste are unsatisfactory. They do give the NEC and the leadership too much say—and the trade unions too much too, through the conference votes which at the outset place items in the party programme—and party members too little, if the NEC were reformed along the lines suggested above, and if there was a determined effort to widen the basis on which the policy is intestiv discussed and promulgated. and to recognize the special role of the parliamentary party with its responsi-bility for day to day implementation of policy and to Labour voters as a whole, this would, in itself, constitute a major and much needed improvement in the mechanism for serring the content of the manifesto.

5 We should also accept that there is nothing sacrosance about the way we currently elect the leader of the party. It does leave constituencies without a Labour MP unrepresented and there may be a case for involving the trade unions in the choice. However an electoral college with constant rows about whether or not its composition has been arrived at to suit a particular canddate or section of the party is no

BNW'S RACING ENGINE IS NOW AVAILABLE TO A WIDER PUBLIC.
BUT NOT MUCH WIDER.

The engine in question has quite a pedigree. In the CSL coupé it helped BMW win the European Touring Car Championship four years in a row. It was a performance, however, only really appreciated by racing drivers like Niki Lauda, Jacky Ickx and Hans Stuck, who discovered how with this engine, they could beat even 5 and 7 litre rivals.

Then, for the M1 racing car, the engine was developed still further So, ultimately, it could produce 800 bhp from its six cylinders.

It first raced last year in the Pro-Car Championships But, again, this was a pleasure restricted to racing drivers like Clay Regazzoni, Nelson Piquet, Jacques Laffite and Alan Jones.

It seemed, however, that it was selfish to restrict such an engine just to the race track.

So a 140 mph road version of the engine was developed for the 635 CSi coupé

And its high speed performance is now accompanied by a remarkable low speed docility. If asked to, the vehicle will trickle along without protest at 1500 rpm in any gear, and then pull away cleanly and strongly as soon as you open the throttle.

But its racing origins clearly show when the car then is flicked, flat-out in second or third, through S-bends so close and difficult that they demand the very best of car and driver.

The 6 Series Check Control System ensures that the car is able to give exactly that: just press the test button before you drive off and seven key functions of the car. are electronically checked.

As for the driver, this BMW's biomechanical design makes the most of his skills.

The driving position, for example. can be optimised by adjusting the seat for height, tilt, reach and rake.

... And the controls and instruments are carefully sited to minimise the time gap between reaction and action.

All in all, rather than being a coupé version of a saloon car, the 635 is very mucha car bred directly out of BMWs race Track experience. (Witness the fact that a 635 has already won the first rounds of the 1980 European Touring Car Championship at Monza and Vallelunga.)

The state of

Alas, it's an experience no more than 595 people in Britain will be able to enjoy in 1980.

Our apologies: but wecan't make our 635 CSi any faster. `

Why Turkey's coup was different

If we assume that terrorism in Turkey, which has cost 5,700 lives in the past two pears, was the work of extremist minorities, then we accept inevitably that for the majority of Turks the military takeover of September 12 was a welcome relief.

However distasteful it may be to defend a coup, one must admit that the relief is there and it is visible. This is no ordinary Putsen by powerhungry officers. It is an outburst of exasperation from the highest rungs of the military hierarchy in a country whose democratic institutions had become bogged down by a paralysing become bogged down by a paralysing combination of faulty parliamentary arithmetics and short-sighted political ambitions.

The restraint, even reluctance, with which the Chief of Staff; General Keran Evren, and his four service chiefs acted, prompted by a sense of mission born our of the sense of mission born out of the Kemalist tradition, that may be difficult to understand outside Turkey, has earned them not only docile acceptance at home, but also a remarkable degree of tolerance from abroad.

not to squander this reserve of good will. So they have taken a solemn oath to do the job and clear out of politics. A top-ranking official who is close to the generals said: "They bave no vested interest in staying in power. They know that the langer they remain the greater the risks of division among them. The memory of the errors committed after the 1960 coup are still fresh in their winds.

What is still unclear is whether the Turkish military will try to solve the country's acute problems themselves, then hand over a clean sinte to the politicians. Or if they will recast the rules of the democratic game in the sacrosance moulds of

As things stand today, the "National Security Council." which rules Turkey by decree is pledged to produce a new charter to redress all the constitutional defects that improved in the decade cines the last emerged in the decade since the last military intervention and the constitutional revision that followed it.

How, for instance, to modify the procedure for the election of the head of state that left Turkey withneat of state that left lurgey with-out a President for the past six months? Or how to empower the President to dismiss a parliament whose composition breeds govern-ment instability or worse?

Mr Demirel and Mr Ecevit, the

to assume or remain in power.

All this the generals now promise to change. And if they can have sound advice from the civilian executive, their experiment may yet succeed.

The most urgent task for the new regime will be to combat terrorism. Legislation is desperately needed to increase penalties and ensure speedy trials, but mainly the need is for measures to boost the morale of the security forces.

No one, of course, expects the political violence to end overnight.

But the Turks cannot help but feel relieved as they read such headlines us: "One week before: 99 dead. One week after: 4."

If the military fail in their efforts to stamp out terrorism, the credibility of the armed forces will suffer a serious blow. The army remains the cornerstone of the system set up by Ataturk, and a failure might open a pandora's box. It is Turkey's last card. Precisely because the stakes are so high, this may encourage the revolu-tionary left (more than the extreme right) to launch a war of attrition ugainst this last bulwark of the established croser.

To avert this prospect, the military regime could be tempted to use systematic repression, even order executions. This would inevitably touch off strong reactions from public opinion in those western countries on whose help Turkey's new leaders rely.

These dilemmas persist as the ca-citement, the fears and the doubts evoked by the coup subside and life in Turkey rapidly switches to an almost forgotten pattern of dis-Most Turks agree that the Septem-

In the nine months that followed, the politicians disregarded one warning too many. What actually triggered the coup

Far from being an isolated episode, this was part of a degenerative pattern that was ending the system. In fact, Mr Erbakan, while lending perliamentary support to Mr Demirel's minarity government, and negotiating the near coalinea with Mr Ecevit, managed to force, barely a week before the camp the vesignation of Mr Demirel's pro-Muslim orientation. Mr Ecevit lent him particulation, Mr Ecevit lent him particulation. Mr Ecevit lent him particulation in the minister of a voice of centure linked to Turkey's pro-Muslim orientation. Mr Ecevit lent him particulation in the policies in order to survive in office.

If Mr Erbakan, taking advantage of his 22 votes in a parliament of 450, indulged in political arrobatics keeping Turkey's big parties on their toes the discreet but metarious infiltration of Mr Turkes's rightest extremists in key posts of the administration and the police eroded the state's struggle against violence from within.

هِ كَذَا مِن رِلامِل

Sir, Although I agree with a good deal of your leading article yesterday (" Miles off course", September 17) I think you go too far in what I take to be your strictures on government monetary policy.

I am not a monetary pointy.

I am not a monetarist in the sense currently used—I think it is not as simple as all their—but since the trade unions are unable to deliver any promises they make on incomes policy, it seems to me that Mrs Thatcher had no alternative.

Monetary policy, however, is not a wonder drug where you give the dose and want for the cure. It involves human behaviour, and the intention is to modify this believiour by squeezing employment, thus inducing a more restrained artitude towards demands for higher wages and prices.

As far as the private sector is concerned, surely the policy is now brilliantly successful. To complain about the reading of one of the gauges (M3), when the pressure is clearly severe and increasing, smacks of magical or incantational fringe of monetarists. The article by Mr Paul Rouzledge in the same issue of your paper makes it clear that the medicine is working, and indeed your own article in its later sections calls for some reduction in the squeeze on the private sector, where the cries of pain are very evident.

The difficulty now facing the the cries of pain are very evident.

The difficulty now facing the Tovernment is that monetary policy does not operate directly, on the Jublic sector except for those parts of the nationalized industries not in a monopoly position, and even these can and do dip into the public purse. The objective new should be to equalize the pressure on both sectors. The Government are trying hard, but it is much more difficult to convince their employees that there is not going to be any more money then for an employer with a profit and loss account. fores shocerely,

No room for the disabled Sir, I should like to draw attention

Sir, I should like to draw attention to a recent change of policy at the British Museum which has resulted in their rafusal to allow disabled academics to park in the museum forecourt, while using the library or museum for research. In two zecent decisions, in January, 1978, and November, 1979, the trustees of the museum drastically curtailed the amount of parking they are prapared to permit, Letters to them on the subject here still not elicited an explanation of the necessity for these restrictions. mese restrictions.

For a small number of disabled scademics, access to the British Library, Department of Manuscripts, atc, is vital to their research. At present, such people are told they can be accommodated in the car park on Saturdays, as if research were a peripheral activity, or hobby to be pursued at weekends. On the contrary, a university teacher's contract requires bim to engage in research, and any serious stademic will spend a considerable amount of his time in such work. The present BM, policy makes this extremely difficult, if not impossible, for this small minority of readers.

The museum has a very large forecount—far larger than many other public and university institutions in London which do not impose such barsh restrictions. The present policy seems to be unnecessary and indefensible, I should like to take this further opportunity to urge the trustees to change it.

Caring for patients who are dying

From Dr R. G. Tweeress
Sir, I read the report about Lord Soper's views on voluntary entingnasia (September 3: with interest. In fact, I read it several times and still was not absolutely sure what his views are. This may of course, be the fault of the reporter, but my overall impression is that Lord Soper is confusing a number of issues, some of which have nothing to do with voluntary enthanasia (homicide by consent I am sorry, therefore, that I was unable to hear his address and, vice versa, that he was unable to hear mine at the same conference later in the day.

I spoke as an opponent of both assisted suicide and voluntary enthanasia about some of the tradi-tional principles underlying medical practice. I also referred to the ex-perience of the hospices and con-cluded with an 18-point "mani-festo" the implementation of which would significantly improve the lotof those with recurrent and terminal cancer. In relation to the latter, no change in the law is necessary, merely change in emphasis in medical education, a greater realisation by doctors of what can be done, and a parallel determination to do it. Several conference members in dicated to me afterwards that "if all doctors did what you preach, I would not need to remain a member of Exit". Perhaps therefore I could be allowed to summarise some of the rinciples I referred to:

A doctor practices medicine in the knowledge that eventually all his patients will die. This implies his patients will die. This implies that he recognises that one day Nature must be allowed to take her course. If you like, there comes a time when, because of the natural order, a patient ought to be allowed to die, and not subjected to futile, inappropriate life-sustaining measures. This is maditional medical practice, and should not be cal practice and should not be referred to by the increasingly popular phrase passive cuthanasia. The word "cuthanasia" is best reserved for the deliberate killing of patients: and the care of the dving should not be thought of as a passive pursuit, ie simply a maner of omissions:

High interest rates

Sir. One cannot help but sympathise with Mr Frewin's cri de coeur (Commercial effect of high interest (Commercial effect of high interest races, September 16) concerning the plight of small businesses in the current climate of economic austerity. Thoughts for your penny

From Mr J. J. Cherns Sir. My former colleagues (Mr. Thiment, September 13, and Mr Glover, September 17) protest too much. The former knows that cross-subsidization is no novelty to HM Stationary Office; the question is of degrae, The latter most surely be aware that an average per page, has long been systematically used to avoid bizarre discrepancies in to avoid bigarre discrepancies in pricing widely varying editions of parliamentary and similar papers:

Argueble conventions underlie Mr Thimont's "costs of production and distribution". Official publications like the Serpell report need to be produced for official purposes. What is the justification for basing prices on full rather than marginal What is the justification for basing prices on full rather than marginal production cost per ccpy? Many governments use the latter; it was used for our own parliamentary publications until 1921. Reversion to it, as suggested a couple of years ago by a parliamentary committee, would go some way to meet Mr Giorer's main point (and Mr Thimont would no doub welcone the golden formula for a cover price the golden formula for a cover price "no higher than is necessary to

One of the important propositions of dialectics is the change of quantity into quality. Another is that everything changes into its opposite. These fundamental teners tend to be ignored but events suggest they are true and it is important to understand and remember them.

For a long time an increase in the destructiveness of wezponty gave the possessor an advantage over an adversary equipped with old-fashioned arms. Agincourt and the Armada ara classic examples of this. But nuclear arms could have reached the critical point engendering a change in quality, and as a result become unusable by either side unless the destruction of our civilization is to be accepted. Neither side can hope to escape appalling and lung-lasting dayastation. As a result, for the first time, the arms race previously leading to war may have rurned into its opposite and be leading to peace.

service, and the right gesture at the right time has far more value than as a mere sum of money. The money is to go as a gift to immigrant communities, to provide them with the means to assert their self-respect and dignity by specific community projects.

It is a specifically Christian insight, that the right to human dignity exists before it has been claimed and does not need to be earned; but ther the acquisi-tion of a sense of human dignity sublademends an effort of self-liberation.

It is specifically Christian for a relatively prosperous and secure part of the community, which Dr Habgood's diocese can be presumed to be, to accept the duty to help to equip a less prosperous and secure part of the community with the part of the community with the gain its objectives. gain its objectives.

Tolerance really exists only between equals, and the Bishop of Burham is asking in effect, achierement could hope to pre-serve an unconditional belief that all men and women are equally worthy of tolerance, equally endowed with basic

Good harvest yields please farmers

Diany farmers who contribute to the crop survey published by The Tunes have had a much more suggestful harvest than they mer. They are pleased than soud yields, here been achieved in crease and often adverse weather. But they remain apprehensive about the market prices with which their efforts will be rewarded.

As reported on Saturday the rerick of the survey compiled by The Times and the separate one conducted bothe Manistry of Agriculture. Fisheries and Food show that Britain will have a record craig harvest this year. There will be 4 high, yield of maintrop gratues while grovers of sugarheer expect results to be far better than seemed likely a few months age.

Farmers incombont almost the whole of Britain report heavy aurumn grass coops, often with low nuritional quality. Those who grow misted rape have also done well while fodder maize con-tinues to fade from fashion.

A Norfola contributor writes that " a remarkable recovery of all crops after the drought of Mar June; fellowed by reasonably femounds reader for the barvest, period, should add up to a satis-fectory farming read." He adds:

A Suffolk contributor has enjoyed a satisfactory harvest, all things considered. "Had prices for our products kept pace with prices of our imports, we should be in a much happier frame of mind". Near the Hampshire coast it was "not a good year with a disastrous haymaking followed by a dragged-out harvest with spring-Town cereals disappointing". Farther inland in the same county the erratic weather ensured that

"sprays were wasted and grain crops were full of late-germinated weeds and unripe ears of grain". Winter harley has performed well on most farms in the survey. hut many spring-sown crops have failed to recover from the dry spring. A Welsh correspondent writes that "winter harley was very heavy for Powys and some crops of over, three tons an acre have heen recorded while spring barley has been very late and some crops will be very disappointing ". A contributor in northern Scotand says that "yields are good but harvesting conditions are de-plorable", while another Scottish contributor says that prices for harley are lower than last year. Results from the dwindling British crop of oats have varied markedly.

On some farms in Scotland and northern England the crop has

The half said out; in interest costs)—even since December. The table shows how this has affected a number of companies who have reported during the past two weeks.

Those groups already finding it difficult to meet their interest costs in late 1979 are obviously suffering most, Hence, Stone-Plant and Weir are both returning post-interest losses. Some have managed to get a firmer grip on their balance sheets.

BICC, for example, has reduced its income gearing. But most groups, notably engineering companies, have paid out a much higher proportion of their profits to the banks and other lenders in the first six months of 1980

Some were already committed to expenditure which could not be avoided. One of the main planks in the present setting is the banks willingness to go on lending to the corporate sector; to the hindrance of government attempts to control the money supply. Most of British industry is not yet hard up against its borrowing facilities—though individual groups may be.

So, in order to survive now, companies are slashing their expenditure programmes and seeking other ways to raise money to cut, or at least peg, their borrowing needs.

The Monopolies Commission's report on credit cards throws a fascinating light on the profitability of the business. The 1978 figures, the last fully available show some contradictory patterns. First Barclaycard which has around 39 per cent of the market only made profits of £4.9m from the business while, for example National Westminster Bank, which has about 40 per cent of the slightly smaller. Access grouping made £7m.

Within Access, where National West-minster, Lloyds and the Midland are the major partners, the differences are even more startling. National Westminster's high profitability is nowhere matched by the other two. Mid-land made £2.9m while Lloyds which is roughly of similar size to the Midland only a measly £1.1m. There seem to be two explanations for this.

First, it: appears that this is a highly geared business with high fixed overheads. So the more customers you have the better. NatWest, for example had 1.5 million personal customers compared to one million for the Midland and only 793,000 for Lloyds Secondly, NatWest's success seems to be largely attributable to a marketing strategy which has resulted in more card-carrying customers prepared to borrow on their cards at high interest charges. No less than 79 per-cent of its cardholders balances were interest bearing as against 72.3 per cent for Midland and only 66 per cent for Lloyds.

Overseas companies

Why they list in London

Everyone has heard of the foreign companies securing London listings, and last week the spotlight fell on Sea Containers, in committee leasing, Mitel, a Canadian supplier, of tele-phone switching equipment, and Toshiba Corporation, the Japanese electrical concern. Few now remember the exit of a raft of Japanese groups from London in the early 1970s when they discovered that one rule was that existing shareholders got first call on new shares in a rights issue. More recently, Firestone Tyre and Rubber sliently delisted

Even so a London listing is desirable if

One day foreign concerns may want to raise money in London (Mitel will next year) and a London quotation could make loans a trifle cheaper to obtain. Finally London has the toughest rules in the world save only for New York where filing is expensive. A London listing means that a company will have little difficulty in setting.

a duotation anywhere elsa.

The abolition of exchange control makes this a good time for British institutions to consider widening portfolios, especially into fields where they may be underrepresented thanks to a paucity of choice at home. The particulars a foreign company files and a visit from the board give institutions chance to get to know them.

However a competent broker has little trouble in dealing anywhere in the world. That is one reason why, of 390 overseas companies listed here, only half-a-dozen have an active trade in their stock.

duct of interest rate policy.

At present, monetary policy is conducted along lines traditionally favoured by the Bank of England. That is to say, the authorities try, to control the money stock (notes and coins in circulation, together with United Kingdom residents' sterling bank deposits) by estimating a level of interest estimating a level of interest rates consistent with their targets for monetary grown over a period of, say, six months.

Broadly speaking the price of money chosen will be based on two considerations. be based on two considerations. First, the extent to which it is likely to influence the growth of bank lending, since each new loan potentially creates a new deposit. Second, the extent to which it is likely to persuade sector investors, tartiprivate sector investors, parti-cularly the major instituted investors, to exchange their Bank lending generally takes longer to respond; and if, as has happened this year, it takes a great deal longer to respond, then the authorities may have to try and maintain gilt-edged sides at a higher level than would be necessary simply to fund the public sector's borrowing requirement.

This year that has not proved too difficult since most investors have continued to believe that recession, bringing with it falling prices and lower interest races, was just around the corner. In addition, the market has been given further stimulus by strong investment interest edged sales to the private sector, however, is that they drain the banking system of liquidity. It is not, moreover, just gilt-edged sales that have drained liquidity out of the system. In the first quarter of this year there were also particularly large flows of money from the private sector to the Exchequer because of an exceptional banching of transition and other payments.

All this left the discount bonses, which act as a buffer between the commercial banks and the central bank, despar-ately short of cash, while the commercial banks themselves were left even shorter of the liquidity they require to meet the reserve asset requirements imposed on them by the Bank of

as a liberal lender of last resort. In effect, having thosen what it considers to be the appropriate medium-term stance for interest rates, the Bank will provide the system with liquidity on demand —albeit that it can exercise some influence on banking secret behaviour according to the way in which it makes this

It is for this reason that we have seen a continuous and massive recycling of funds into the banking system this year. Leaving eside its discount market operations, the Eank has released to the commercial banks all remaining special deposits. At the time of release. in January, this was worth almost £1,000m.

In addition, the Bank has pro-vided various packages of short-term Equidity by buying (non-reserve) gilt-edged smark from the banks on a temporary basis. At present, aid outstanding under this heading totals some

The net result of all this has been that the banks have been abe to lacrease their reserve assets by more than a fifth over the last nine months and, by extension, their overall level of comestic business by a roughly similar amount.
Had the Bank decided at some stage that lenting was growing far too fast and that counter measures were desirable it could, of course, have acted in a more restrictive way. But the penairy, inevitably, would have been that short-term interest rates would have risen sharply.

is it wise to use a system that relies on the central bank (or, for that matter, ministers; cor- of "fl rectly estimating the approp- stages. riste price of money? Secondly even if the other systems were to be ruled out as non-starters, has interest true policy been run sensibly this year?

As far as other systems go, the straight alternative would be one in which the authorities sought to control only the quantity of money in circulation, leaving the market to work out the correct price. The extreme form of such a system would involve the com-mercial banks being required to keep the size of their sterling deposits in a set propor-tion to their cash holding at the Bank of England. The sole job of the Bank would then be to determine the appropriate growth rate for these cash hold-ings and to ensure, through its market operations, that the chosen path was followed— whatever the price.

This is what is known as non-discretionary monetary base control. Protections of the sysiob of the Bank would then be non-discretionary moderary base control. Protagonists of the system hold that the authorities dislike it precisely because it removes their traditional discretion. The authorities, on the other hand, say that the reason they are not keen on it is because it is far too rigid and is likely to lead to much greater valerility in interest rates. to volatility in interest rates, to nobody's benefit.

One way or another, we may well be heading, as a first step at least, towards a compromise loaded in favour of the authori-would be ready (or might be forced?) to yield discretion at a later date is another question. One must suspect, how-ever, that both politicians and officialdom will remain loathe to yield discretion in this field so long as they remain unprepared to institutionalize the commitment to sound money in the form of an independent central bank. As far as the conduct of monetary interest rate policy this year goes, one can only say that it has totally failed to prothat it has totally failed to produce the desired results in terms of sterling M3. It is hardly surprising, moreover, that to many people it looks to have been a total shambles. What on earth was the Eark doing draining liquidity out of the system under the surplementary special deposit scheme. mentary special deposit scheme (the "corset") and feeding it back through gilt-edged sale and repurchase arrangements.

What was the intended spirit of the priority lending directive given to the banks?

Was it really that clearing bank lending to the personal sector should grow at an annualized rate of over 39 per cent in the lost quarter? In many respects the clearing banks have hed the authorities over a barrel this year.

As the Government and these responsible for conducting monetary policy set about picking up the pieces, the ultimate question. Not really playing the game

As working weeks tend to become shorter and leisure activities gather in importance Britain's games industry should be ready to cash in on idle hands. Instead, the industry is in total disertay, disorganized and fluttering round the fringes of what could be a someone.

This is the general view of Mr Jack Jaffe, London-besed genies inventor, puzzle pundit and constant critic of games companies. Mr Jaffe has been figuratively hitting his head against a brick wall for the past rive years an emping to persuade games manufacturers to break new ground in terms of organization, promotion and regulation, pronotion and application of the situation, extinuity in the adult

He points out that unlike all other consumer-based musically the pames industry has no central body representing it. This he believes is vital, not only to supply information to convenient and the media but consumers and the media but to promote the scrivity of games playing. The industry's market-ing techniques, he says, are poor and often non-existent in

"In no other leigure industry "in no other leasure mousery do producers expect their produces to sell without effective advertising and marketing, but the vast majority of games produced in Britain are not advertised at all to consumers and only rerely to retailers."
He calculates that only 3 to 4 per cent of tumover is spent on repromotion and advertising. per cent of humover is spent on promotion and edvertising.

Poundat of the Society of Inventors of Games and Mathematical Puzzles (Sigma), Mr Jaffe and the society have made many proposals to mandiacurers such as a national games fair, school games clubs, and a mational natwork of adult. and a national network of adult

The industry has not merely ignored them, its rudeness extends to not replying to letters or phone calls." He recalls a brief success last year industry would have to persuada when six established companies additional retail outlets, like

Only one of these six companies took the trouble to advise us in advance of the meeting that it would not be attending. The others simply did not turn up."

Another sore point with Mr Jaffe is that the industry steadfustly refuses to recognize the potential in games for adults. North America, France and Germany, he claims, have much more developed adult the industry improves its marketing techniques." An important corollary of adult games playing would be that press and TV would devote resources to games reporting as they-do abroad.

Mr Jaffe's main claim to fame is that he invented the game is that he invented the game Libido which is designed " to get players to reveal their sexual attitudes". He had problems persuading manufacturers to produce the game so he formed his ewn company Sheledas, made the game himself and has so far sold "well into six figures".

As an inventor, he is under- The electronic-video games standably concerned about market, he thinks is also being

"Games invention is as much a creative process as writing or photography. Moreover, a game has to be tested by playing as often as is needed to perfect it. All of this takes creative ability, experience and time but the industry does norhing to encourage pro-fessional inventors and much to discourage them. It often fails to acknowledge games sub-mitted, it never offers any seri-ous critique of such games, it rarely credits the inventor with authorship of his game and above all it fails to pay adequate royalties."

mishandled. "Virtuelly all these games are based on movement-coordination — shoot at it or avoid it.

"The intellect is not engaged. "The intellect is not engaged, so after a relatively short period players get bored. Most of these games have originated abroad. The market will not develop as it should until domestic companies involve professional inventors in the origin of video games." He makes the point that it is a great deal more difficult to sall great deal more difficult to sell a new game in Britain to a manufacturer than it is to have a first novel published. Hundreds of book publishers produce they are thousands of new books. duce thousands of new bnoks each year. There are only seven major games companies which, says Mr Jaffe, produce between two and six new games each

Mr Jaffe has harsh words in say about monegement in the games industry. He says: "The overall calibre of the industry's management is poor. This emonstrated not just by industry's conservatism or almost monthly news that another toy-games company is in the receiver's hands, but also by the success of the United State the success of the Other States company Mitton Bradbury's subsidiary in capturing around 30 per cent of the market within three years of it starting operations in Britain. Had this occurred in any other industry, it would have produced media headlines and cries of outrage."

If nothing else, Mr Jaffe is a crusader. In a effort to make games p2y, he has embarked on a venture aimed at selling pro-motional games and puzzles to companies or their advertising agents. He is critical of the advertising and marketing world for being slow to recognize the appeal of promotional games and puzzles and claims he can devise a promotional pame or puzzle to suit any client. He is at present working on games for a bank and an oil

Slump bites deeper in N-east

The Team Valley Trading Estate, Gareshead, in the northeast corner of England, intrudes into the open countryside to the south of the river Tyne. The estate was conceived in the mid-thirties as industrial transplant surgery for the economy of a region suffering the ills flowing from an aging heavy engineering base and world recession. Today it houses the headquar ters of the English Industrial Estates Corporation and 120 factories producing a wide rariety of products from heavy mining machinery to banknotes.

More than 16,000 people work on the estate. As Team Valley nas grown over the past 40 years, shipbuilding, armaments and heavy engineering on the banks of the Type have been in retreat The flag of the Queen's Award to Industry is no rare sight on an estate which for four decades has been easing the burden of Tyneside's acoveaverage unemployment rate. A formula devised to break from the recession of the thirties is still paying dividends in today's chill industrial climate. Team Valley's flexibility and diversity has meant that wholesale closures have been rare. Three, however, were an-nounced recently, BOC, Dependable Products and Liner. Industry in the regions

At the Dunlop Hydraulic Hose works, 1,700 people are now on a four-day week. Short-time working and gloomy pros-pects also face another of the estate's biggest employers. Thorn Heating.

Demand for Thorn's products is reported at an all-time low with stocks in hand at a record level. Six hundred workers at the plant face an uncertain future; uneasy in the knowledge that the company's sister plant at nearby Spennymoor, County Durham, has 1,500 men on short-time and 400 redundancies in the pipeline.

Generally medium and smaller sized firms are weathering the recession more easily than larger employers. Although many of the smaller fry are experiencing cash flow problems and often awaiting payment from slow settling debtors they are existing on borrowed capibrake on new investment.

Mr George Arnold, regional organizer of the Amalgamated Union of Engineering Workers says: "The situation on the Team Valley is by no means as bad as elsewhere but the problem of short-time working is growing daily and will soon reach a critical level."

In one respect the position is already critical. Over the past already critical. Over the past two years there has been a dramatic reduction—down by as much as 20 per cent—in the numbers of apprenticeships on offer. Even the local council has been forced to cut back. The number of doors being closed on Gateshead school leavers worries Councillor Bill Collins, the leader of Gateshead council. He urged a recent delegation from the Department of Employment to seek new ways of making apprentice-ships available including allowing local authorities to provide subsidized skill training from the rates.

"It is one way in which youngsters could find initial employment, learn a skill to trade and be well placed to get a job when the situation improves". says Councillor Collins. This year the prospects for school leavers on the Team Valley are bleak. Gateshead has 3.500 youngsters seeking jobs.

So far only around 500 have found employment. Gateshead's employment development officer has a brief which includes attracting new industries to the town. His verdict is pessimistic: "There is no immediate sign of things improving. I can see at least another year of agony."

Australian shares face shakeout

From Perth; Western Australia Australian stock markets, buoyed by rises in the gold price last week and some specmcular profit announcements, still face the likelihood of at least a temporary retreat in the near future.

While the recent boom bears little resemblance to the Poserdon led scramble of 1969, there are signs, according to leading brokers, of a healthy shakeout, perhaps pulling back the price of speculative shares by as much as 25 per cent.

This would not detract from the underlying factors that have prompted the rush into Australian stocks—a vast array of resources, political stability, relatively low inflation and an undervalued dollar

The results announced cently certainly confirmed the markets' confidence in leaders such as Western Mining Corporation. It reported a prefit increase of 133 per cent, from AS24.6m (about £12m) to A557.4m. Western Mining will be remembered as a glamour stock of the Poseidon era, and it was one company that fulfilled the promise of that time. Its nickel operations launched then have been highly success-ful, but today it also has other interests, ranging from uranium to coal, base merals and gold. Almost all of the leading Australian shares are relevant to the world's most pressing problems—energy and energy related projects and "disaster. commodities" such as gold and damonds.

Markets:

Oil and gas exploration is at a high level, yet it is not expected to reach its peak until about 1984. New onshore areas, once thought to be of no value, are yielding gas and oil, though a major discovery is still awaited

All of this has excited overseas investors, and has pushed the Sydney All Ordinaries Index to an all-time high of 99.62, closing the week at 990.22. Mining and oil stocks have been the engine for this.

Vast mineral wealth has been a leading-factor behind the rush into Australian stocks. Western Mining Shares, for example, are now about six times their price during the market trough of the sarly 1970s. London investors were strong influence on the 1960 boom, which pushed Poseidon shares from A$1.10 to A$280 in a few months. The market collapsed early in 1970 and Poseidon led the fall. Now Poseidon is sharing in the mining recovery, announcing last week a trebling of its profits to AS7m. Ironically, nickel played no part. Its gold interests have been responsible for its revival, although the share are at the efficiency shares are at the relatively sober level of just over AS6.40 (from a low this year of A$1.60).

Overseas buyers are still, as they were a decade ago, the key to the future of the Australian market. The difference is that 35, 657, 617 active in the Australian market contributing a new set of fac-tors to the buying mood. One observer said it was not hard to interest Americans in Australian stocks. The question was what to buy. Americans appear to be enthralled by the oil prospects and the relatively few wildcar wells that have been drilled the Continent almost the size of the Continental United States.

Australian brokers expect another fall in Australian prices, though they do not necessarily see this as any more than an inevitable correction. Factors that could contribute to the decline include the overvaluing of many prospects not yet proved by small exploration companies, and the results of both the United States and Australian elections (Australia will go to the polls on October 18).

At was not an easy year for industry, 1 had to face rapidly mounting economic ures, including high interest rates, and with the effects of major strikes in haulage, engineering, British Steel and pendent Television. Yet, apart from fusion, which continued to mark time, Inited Transport and Thames Television, h both turned in lower contributions, ther major interests increased their ts, some of them quite appreciably. In ircumstances, it is disappointing that re-tax profit should show no greater cess but the answer is to be found in igh interest rates which ruled during of the year Profit, before interest, by £12.15 million, to £92.57 million, in increase in interest charges of just I per cent reduced this improvement 3.44 million. Relative to this swingeing ase in interest, borrowings rose by only er cent during the year.

The broad range of our interests is one ET's strengths. Our policy is to build up good businesses by internal growth and ctive acquisition of undertakings ating within the range of our present vities. It is the application of this policy er than the acquisition of new and unted businesses which has increased our it from £41 million to £71 million over last five years.

Outlook

It has been my practice for a number of years to give shareholders my personal views on the outcome of the current year. In the light of the country's economic position and the resultant rapid and pronounced changes in business fortunes which have taken place recently, it will come as no surprise that I am not prepared to make a forecast this year. This in no way implies pessimism on my part; it is simply that whatever I may say today, could be rendered significantly misleading in a matter of weeks and be of no use to shareholders. Suffice it to say that the Group is in good shape and well equipped to deal with whatever the future holds.

In the dry cargo market, the leading talking point, was the rumoured purchase by Russia of a large volume of sugar estimated to be at least a million tunnes, but possibly as high as 1.6 million tonnes.

Because of secret transactions accurate figures are impossible to obtain, but the reasons for this beavy buying are appar-ently delays in the Soviet domestic crop and a poor Cuban harvest. Usually Russia does not start buying in the world market until November/December.
